On the agenda for the Kalispell City Council members on Monday night is selecting a contractor for the Kalispell Parkline Trail installation.

KALISPELL, Mont. — The Kalispell City Council approved the cost of the Kalispell Parkline Trail project for $8.1 million on Monday night. The work will include a $7.5 million contract with Sandry Construction.

Sid Daoud was the only council member who voted against funding the project. He wanted to commit the “bare bones” of a park and preserve the city’s reserve fund.

“You get the grass, the irrigation, the benches and whatnot,” Daoud said. “If we do those things, then we’ll barely dip into the reserves at all.”

Daoud’s amendments to the project failed to get support. Other council members discussed cutting certain parts of the project that they thought seemed excessive. But ultimately, most of the council members agreed not to push off aspects of community value.

“I’d like to see us do this project right then to piecemeal it. I think we have huge community involvement, huge staff involvement and council,” Kalispell City Council member Kari Gabriel said.

The council also approved a public hearing May 17 about applying for a $50,000 grant to expand the Samaritan House homeless shelter.
